NOTE - CIA Planning

SUBJECT: [REDACTED]

On 12 August General Stewart reported the gist of a meeting which had been held on 11 August on the above subject. Participants at the meeting included Dr. Fubini, Dr. McMillan, Mr. McCone and Mr. Vance.

Mr. McCone stated that the CIA would not develop a unilateral systems engineering capability and said that he clearly understood it was the job of the Air Force to boost reconnaissance satellites to orbit and to operate and control them while on orbit.

In addition to the technology studies outlined in Mr. Vance's 29 July letter to Mr. McCone, Mr. McCone recommended that CIA do system design studies. These would be conducted under Mr. Maxie through contracts with industry in response to work statements prepared by the CIA. Apparently, Mr. Vance and Dr. McMillan agreed. However, they felt that SAFSP should participate in these studies and, in particular, in preparation of the work statements.

General Stewart then asked Colonel Worthman, Colonel Buzzard and myself to give him our thoughts on the criteria and ground rules which should be used in deciding on the orbital vehicle, and an analysis as to why the preparation of the work statements and the studies should be a joint effort by the CIA and (S)NRO.
